

blue morning farm

May 5/6 2011

We're Back and ready as ever to start the season. Today marks the start of the third season of deliveries from blue morning farm and the second season of the 30 Week Share. And up to today it has felt like the start of the past two seasons. Since mid February we have been preparing our fields, our bodies and our minds for the season that lies ahead. Seeds were ordered and started in any one of our greenhouses. Garlic that was planted in the fall broke through the ground with its deep green leaves. The tractor has been roaring all over the farm, on dry days and even some days when it hasn't been so dry. Potatoes were delivered on time and we managed to get them planted. And the packing shed got its spring cleaning as we prepared it for the season. All of these events are tell tale signs that the season is already well under way. And none of this is surprising to us (or you) so today, the first deliveries of the season, should feel familiar and routine. Today though, the fields felt anything but routine, I mean they looked similar to seasons past but the possibilities they held seemed even greater than before. The rows and small garden plots called out for the tomatoes, eggplants, and peppers waiting patiently in the greenhouse. They asked about the green beans, squash, cucumbers

What's in the Share this Week?

1. Salad Greens
2. Spinach
3. Pac Choi
4. Spring Onions
5. Arugula
6. Sage and melons. They showed me the ripening onions and the freshly dug potatoes. All this on a wednesday afternoon, and that's the thing about the beginning of any season it can turn the ordinary into a whole new experience. Thanks for joining us and we hope you enjoy the ride.

Spring On The # Farm

Say Hello!

www.bluemorningfarm.com
bluemorningcsa@gmail.com
304.876.0532